The closest like-for-like option is the 42" CARP FISHING LANDING NET WITH 2M HANDLE + STINK BAG. At £21.50, it undercuts the main NGT setup by a small margin while keeping the same 42" size and 2m handle length. In practical terms, that makes it a very similar choice for carp anglers who want a big net for safe fish control without spending extra. It's slightly cheaper and has a strong rating, but it doesn't shout about the same dual float system branding, so if you specifically want that buoyancy feature for easier netting in weedy margins or when playing fish at range, the NGT may still edge it. Choose this one if you want near-identical carp net performance for a touch less money.

The NGT CARP FISHING POP-UP CRADLE PROTECTIVE UNHOOKING MAT is a different tool, but it's a very sensible alternative if your real priority is fish care rather than just landing them. At £39.95, it costs more than the original net system, but it gives you a proper padded cradle for unhooking larger carp safely, especially useful on hard banks, match venues, and venues that insist on top-level fish protection. It's not a replacement for a landing net, so it won't help you scoop a fish in at the bank, but it's a better buy if you already own a decent net and need a safer place to weigh, photograph, and recover fish. This is the one to choose for bigger carp sessions, night fishing, and waters where responsible fish handling matters most.

The Roddarch© Fishing Seat Box & Rucksack is more of an all-in-one carrying solution than a landing net alternative, but it suits anglers who are building a compact coarse or carp kit. At £35.99 and rated 4.6 stars, it offers strong value if you want to carry tackle, bait, and accessories in one organised system. Compared with the main product, it clearly doesn't land fish, but it may be the better buy if your current problem is kit transport rather than netting. It's ideal for roving anglers, canal and river coarse fishers, or anyone who wants a tidy setup for short sessions. If you already have a net and just need better storage, this is a practical upgrade.

The Roddarch Fishing Seat Box and Rucksack with 18 Litre ABS Tackle Box is the more structured version of that idea. Again, it's not a landing net, but it's a useful alternative for anglers who want a sturdier carry system with a proper tackle box built in. At £35.99 and 4.6 stars, it's a smart pick for day sessions on commercial fisheries, especially if you like keeping hooks, feeders, and end tackle neatly sorted. It's more expensive than the NGT net system, so it only makes sense if you need storage more than fish-handling gear. Choose it if your fishing trips are getting more organised and you want one bag that does a lot of jobs.

The Jueachy Military Tactical Backpack 30L is the least direct alternative, but it can still work for anglers who need a tough, waterproof carry bag for bait, waterproofs, and accessories. At £23.99, it sits close to the price of the original net system and offers decent value for mobile fishing, bank walking, and rough-weather sessions. What it does better is storage versatility and weather resistance; what it does worse is obvious—it has nothing to do with landing fish safely. This is best for lure anglers, pike anglers, or carp anglers who already have landing gear and simply need a rugged pack for moving around the bank. If you're after a fishing-specific tool, it's not the answer, but as a general outdoor bag it's solid.

Still Buy the Original If...

Buy the original NGT 42" Dual Net Float System if you want a purpose-built carp landing net with a 2m handle and the convenience of float support right out of the packet. It's the best all-round pick for anglers who want a straightforward, fish-safe landing setup without paying for extras they don't need.
